When ready to look at a Fall Overcoat or Suit, you will naturally wish to see the best variety of Ready Made Garments accessible. To say we have the most, the best and the cheapest Clothes, wouldn't prove anything. Let us rather request that after you have seen other stocks, we will be allowed to show you ours. If, after such comparison, your decision is against us, we'll not complain.

Our position in the retaill trade warrants the statement that buyers of Men's and Boys' apparel of any kind hardly do themselves justice in making selections until they have, at least, looked at our Stock.

AN INTERESTING OPERATION

the Effects of an Injury to One of His Eyes Received in Wales Years Age-A Credit to Wheeling

RESTORED TO SIGHT

An INTELLIGENCER reporter recently which reflects great credit on the sciendetail would interest the general public, and perhaps result in benefit to others who are similarly stillcted, some inquiries were made, which developed the facts given below. The story is not only interesting, but strictly true, and if any person feels an interest in it and desires to inves tigate further, Mr. Totterdale can be seen at any time at his work, and will no doubt be glad to substantiate every statement be glad to substantiate every statement made.

Lewis Totterdale is an iron worker, and a native of Wales. He is now employed as a boiler at the Æina Sheet Iron Mill, over the river. In the month of March, 1873, while at work in an Iron mill in the town of Briton Ferry, South Wales, he was severely burned by a flash of iron from a hot mass of the metal which was being shaped by a steam hammer. The molten metal burned his left eye so severely that the ball was penetrated and the iris wounded, and the lids were burned to such an extent that when were burned to such an extent that when they began to heal they grew together at the edges and also adhered to the eye ball over its antire surface.

the edges and also anhered to the eye ball over its surface.

Since the accident this eye has been useless, and Mr. Totterdale was practically blind, seeing barely well enough to continue his work.

About a month after the accident, Tutterdale went to Bristol, and was operated upon by a connectant angulaits, and the upon by a competent specialist, one of the staff of the Royal Eye Infirmary in that city. From this operation he received practically no benefit, and he concluded that it was no use to attempt to restore his sight.

practically no benefit, and he concluded that it was no use to attempt to restore his sight.

To-day, however, thirteen years and more after his serious accident occurred, Mr. Totterdale can use both eyes almost as well as ever. For this happy relief he is indebted to Dr. S. M. Slocum, the well known oculist and aurist of this city, at whose Eye and Err Iolirmary, at No. 09 Sixteenth street, the operation was performed which restored the man to sight. Few cities of the size of Wheeling can boast of such an institution as Dr. Slocum's infirmary; indeed few cities of any size can excel it except in size. Its completeness in all the requisities for the treatment of every description of affections of the eye and ear atrikes the visitor at once, and Dr. Slocum has fairly won a high reputation by successful treatment of stabborn diseases and injuries in his special line. In no case, however, has he achieved a result more beneficent to the patient, more creditable to himself or more interesting to the public, than the one just referred to, by which Mr. Totterdale's injured eye was restored to its normal condition of health and usefulness.

The injured lids were first separated, and the two lids then cut locas from the injured eye was restored to its normal condition of health and usefulness. The injured lids were first separated, and the two lids then cut loose from the ball. This delicate and difficult operation was, however, only preparatory work. The eye was still useless. To restore it to sight, the operation known to surgery as 'iridectomy' was necessary. This operation consists in creating by artificial means a new pupil, and was the method attempted at the Bristol institution, where, however, it did not succeed. An incision was first made, by which access to the ball was secured The iris was then grasped with a fine instrument, pulled out, and cut. This opens a new pupil, and the eye gradually assumes its original functions.

Eventually Mr. Totterdale will see as well as ever. At first the cyclids are of course more or less inflamed from the operation, and the new pupil over-sensitive from having been so long effectually veiled from the light. Gradually, however, these difficulties will disappear, and Mr. Totterdale will see as well as before his socident in 1873. Shortly after the operation he found himself able to read diamond print a foot distant from his eye—an admitted test of the normal condition of his sight.

Wheeling can point with pride to a specialist who accomplishes such results. Dr. Slocum is an educated physician.

whosing can point with pride to a specialist who accomplishes such results. Dr. Slocum is an educated physician, whose work speaks for itself. This is but one case, though a conspicuous one where his skill has been successful. Persons having weak or defective sight or hearing should consult him.
